To Michael and Wendy Collier,
the prime movers of this catalogue

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Firstly, I must acknowledge the grant made by the Research Fund of the University of Sheffield to cover the expenses entailed in producing this catalogue.

I should also like to thank the Rev. and Mrs. Michael Collier, of Castleton Vicarage; their generous hospitality, interest in the collection, and help over practical problems, have all contributed to the work in hand. I much appreciate the assistance and encouragement of my colleagues in the Postgraduate School of Librarianship and Information Science and in the University Library. In particular, I must thank Mr. Alan Cass, of the Cataloguing Department, for his advice on some difficult points.

Finally, to Mrs. Irene Ashton, who typed my manuscript, my warmest thanks for her skill and enthusiasm.

INTRODUCTION

The Farran Library has been described in some detail by Dr. E.D.Mackerness<sup>1</sup> in an article published in 1958, so that the catalogue may be regarded as complementary to Dr. Mackerness's work on this unique collection. It is therefore intended, in this brief introduction, only to add, where possible, to the description of the contents, and otherwise to explain the present arrangement of the Library and the conventions used in cataloguing.

Firstly, it may be helpful if reference is made to particular items in the collection which emerged in the course of cataloguing, and in addition to those specified by Dr. Mackerness. John Cooke's Preacher's assistant (1783) is an unusually interesting author and subject guide to sermons and to their location in public libraries. Several works on enthusiasm were found, as well as Thomas Green's Dissertation, notably the pamphlets by Dr. Thomas Morgan and Theophilus Evans, and the introduction to Thomas Hartley's Sermons. The pastoral letters of Thomas Sherlock, Bishop of London, "on the late earthquakes" (1750), the anonymous Address (item no. 10) and Serious thoughts on earthquakes at Lisbon, 1755 (item no. 644) may be of special historical interest. Additional references to Socinianism will be found in the works of Jonathan Edwards, Charles Leslie, Francis Randolph, and in the anonymous pamphlet, Thoughts on the progress of Socinianism (item no. 740). The numerous "works on practical piety" referred to by Dr. Mackerness include several on teaching in charity schools and Sunday schools, in particular those by Sarah Trimmer, an early eighteenth century pamphlet by Francis Gastrell, and James Slade's Lessons. Ferdinando Travell's Duties of the poor ... in the education of their children, one of the SPCK Religious tracts, is one of the many items concerned with "the poor" as a separate class; other subjects dealt with in the SPCK series are drunkenness, gambling, swearing, stealing, slandering, backbiting, "ill company". In connection with these, an especially relevant sermon is that preached by Richard Watson before the Society for the Suppression of Vice - to which is added information about the Society.

To turn to some of the secular material, Gilbert White's Natural history of Selborne is a first edition (1802) with a beautiful coloured plate, but unfortunately the second volume only of White's Works in natural history; there is no trace of the first. A sermon On singularity and excess in philological speculation by Richard Laurence, addressed to the University of Oxford in 1807, perhaps deserves special mention, as does Charles Leslie's Treatise of the word person (item no. 461). Blackie's Popular encyclopedia (new edition, 1858-61) is valuable for its illustrations as well as for the text, and might be added to Dr. Mackerness's list of nineteenth century works on miscellaneous subjects.

Secondly, on the size of the collection, Dr. Mackerness refers to accounts stating that "there were at one time as many as two thousand books"; the "figure of eleven or twelve hundred", which seemed more likely to him, in fact exceeds the number of volumes now on the shelves, some 700 only. However, the number of items, 881, is accounted for by well over 30 volumes of sermons, tracts and other items bound together, sometimes with up to 30 items in one volume, each of which has been dealt with separately. Unfortunately, several of the sets of sermons and other collected works in two or more volumes have been found to be incomplete.

Thirdly, Dr. Mackerness refers to existing catalogues (duplicated from the<sup>2</sup> original copy). Only one manuscript catalogue, in book form, and a borrowers' book are preserved at Castleton, the catalogue by no means complete.

The collection is housed in the vestry of St. Edmund's Parish Church, Castleton. After a preliminary survey made in July, 1976, when items were selected and catalogued for an exhibition, the stock was sorted out as far as possible in the time available into the following order: items of the seventeenth century; eighteenth century theological works (the greater part of the collection); miscellaneous eighteenth century, and nineteenth century items; sets of sermons and other collected works; larger volumes. The limited shelf-space has to some extent determined the arrangement of the collection.

Each volume has been given a shelf-number, which is normally pencilled inside the cover, in the top lefthand corner. This number appears at the end of the catalogue entry; a number such as 225c indicates that the item in question is bound with 225 a, etc. Every item has been numbered, the number appearing on the left of the main entry; added entries refer to the main entry. STC or Wing numbers (referring to the three, and 102, items respectively) have been quoted.

One of the most interesting features of the collection is the number of items, remarked upon by Dr. Mackerness, at the end of his article, "of which no other copies are known outside the three or four main libraries of Great Britain". Any item not traced in the British Museum Catalogue, or, where applicable, in STC or Wing, has been marked accordingly. Similarly, anonymous works not traced in Halkett & Laing have been noted.

2. Mentioned in MS notes by Farran in several items, e.g. no.733.

Dr. Mackerness also referred to "a dozen or more volumes printed in British towns other than London". Cataloguing has revealed many more, some of them pamphlets bound into multiple volumes - nearly a hundred items in all, representing the work of provincial printers in England, Scotland and Ireland. A list of the towns, printers or publishers concerned, dates of publication and item numbers has been appended to the catalogue.

As far as possible, and to facilitate cross-checking, the headings established by the British Museum have been followed. Anonymous works are entered under the author attributed by the British Museum, by Halkett & Laing, or in some cases by the Dictionary of National Biography.

Manuscript notes made in the books, either by Farran or his brother-in-law, J.G. Hamilton, are so copious, and occur so frequently, even on title-pages, as well as on endpapers and elsewhere, that it would have been impracticable to record them all; only the most significant have been included.
